

Tyler Aston Personal Manual

- My style.

I am an "Assertive Debater." I am very curious and seek to understand things by looking at things differently, especially when it's the prevailing mode of thought. I have a playful sense of humor and seek to be entertaining. Seeking new ideas leads to being naturally extraverted and enjoy making new friends, naturally gravitating towards people with new or different ideas.

- Where I find value.

I value the underdog and outliers. There is great value in things that are so different they stand out. What fits in a standard deviation is already being utilized and taken advantage of but true innovation comes from reaching out farther from the average and normal.

- What I don't have patience for.

I find it hard to tolerate delay on account of lack of effort and care. When difficult circumstances arise, I find it easy to be calm and able to accept the majority of challenges but someone's lack of effort or care will increase the difficulty of the challenge.

- How I communicate.

Having to extend communication because of lack of information presented is very inefficient. Therefore, its best to communicate all of your ideas, questions or doubts upfront.

- How I like to be helped.

Ask how you can help me. I prefer to be in control over what I need to do which includes organizing and managing tasks. If one of those aspects is done differently it may affect other aspects of getting things done. That's why it's just easiest to ask. I love good communication.

- Common misconceptions.

Seeing things differently and choosing to go against the grain doesn't mean I will be argumentative. I have a lot of experience and have learned when and where my personality shines. When I find myself in a spot of contention, I understand the correct way to go about resolving my issues.
