

Tyler Aston Week 11 Reflection

SCORE 100/100

I gave myself this score based on my in-depth responses to 5 20-point questions.

20 pts Questions Cognitive: (Wow, I learn?... Ok that is deep!)

Why is this week's topic important for teamwork?

Leadership is something every team needs and the members need to understand in order to help the leader. A team works together and sometimes they have a team leader or sometimes they follow a leader who's responsible for many teams. Either way if I am going to be a part of a team its important to know how to lead so I can feel confident in that role and if I'm not a leader I'll know how to best help my leader.

How do plan on contributing to the team, besides completing your tasks?

I plan on becoming a better leader for my projects. I can do this by communicating with everyone and seeing how I can help them. For the weeks I'm not leading I will see what more I can do to help the lead of the project we are working on and how to help my teammates.

How does your experience relate to other experiences you have had?

My past experiences we had very small task to get done where I was a leader. Sometimes I was put in a position to lead a team but it turns out I was the only one in that team. In this class our projects are a good size for the time we have and there's a lot of planning going on and this team differs from others this semester in my other classes by how fluid we are able to get things done. I think this is done because we all are very compassionate towards each other.

Tell me about what you taught someone? And what did they learn, that they didn't know before?

I talked with my uncle at a family reunion who is a software developer and we talked about many things and one of them being about leadership positions. He is a team lead for a company and I was mentioning this week's topic and big L leadership and little l leadership. I think I remember him saying he was familiar with it but as we talked it more solidified in my mind as we talked about real world applications.

If this was a religion class, how would you relate this week's topic to the gospel?

One of the readings for the week was Leadership the Lords Way. Christ was the perfect example in everything he did. He was a great leader. In my mind I always picture the Savior walking with a lost sheep. There are many people who are able to stay on task and stay with the group, a great leader is able to find those who are starting to stray away and help them find there way into the heard.
