

Tyler Aston Week 5 Reflection

SCORE 100/100

I have proven my knowledge and practice of these weeks' topic through in-depth and insightful responses to 5 of the 20-point questions.

20 pts Questions Cognitive: (Wow, I learn?... Ok that is deep!)

Why is this week's topic important for teamwork?

Being a professional happens when you are at your best. Working in a team we are all expected to act in a way that fits the project. In a workplace environment we are expected to do our best and as a team we act as a professional. This leads to better project outcomes and rewards higher success.

How do plan on contributing to the team, besides completing your tasks?

There are many ways to show contribute by being professional. The ones that currently mean the most to me are respecting polices, being organized, punctual, dependable, excellent communicator, knowledgeable, honest and well groomed. By holding these attributes, I feel confident in all my contributions brought to the team.

How does your experience relate to other experiences you have had?

I have been a university student for many semesters at different parts of my adult life. Early in my learning career I was professional in many ways but lacked in others. Now as a much more experienced student and have worked professionally outside of school I've learned to appreciate the level of professionalism required to be the most successful at my job and academics.

Tell me about what you taught someone? And what did they learn, that they didn't know before?

In my Christian History class, we have been assigned a group project that required group work to be done outside of class. By presenting ideas of professionalism like ways of better communication and holding each other accountable, my team has changed the way we have got work done. I think they have learned those skills through practice.

If this was a religion class, how would you relate this week's topic to the gospel?

As a religion class would teach about strengthening your relationship with the Lord, the concept of reverence and respect would equate to professionalism. When we are professional at our jobs it is out of respect for those we work with and what is expected of us for what we are given (usually money). The same is true with our Heavenly Father. His commandments should be treated with the highest amount of professionalism.
